Nature Studies in the Rutland Valley.

THE green hills and valleys of Vermont have been too little exploited. The wealth of beauty which they enshrine largely escapes the glance of the railway traveler as he swiftly passes by. But intelligence and capital are recognizing their mute invitation, and our fastnesses are explored by others than the hunter and the fisherman, the feller of trees and the lonely backcountry farmer.

A new invader has scaled the rocks and looked down into the hidden pools of her trout streams — an eye capable not only of seeing but also of telling a true story of what it sees, and — what is more — of enabling others to share the picture. And this not merely a mental vision, but an accurate and artistic reproduction that other eyes may rest upon with delight when far away and at quiet leisure.

To recognize the complete difference in art values from those of a generation ago in photography, by comparison with the book and magazine illustrations of that day, is to experience genuine astonishment. The succeeding series of views taken by the faithful camera portray a few scenes not more beautiful than scores of others which lie close about Rutland, and which may well be offered to a wider circle. It is hoped that they may be instrumental in making more friends for Vermont, her scenery and her people.

is not the largest mountain in the world, neither are we the largest dealers in this great country of ours; but we endeavor to make our customers interest ours for mutual benefit.

We have one of the best Test-Cases for testing the eyes that is on the market, and know how to use it. We make no charge for examinations.

We have been before the public for too long a time to say anything about our skill as workmen, we believe in honest work and in getting a fair price for what we do.

We do not wish to mar this page with a long description of what we keep in stock, but can assure you that we have everything that is usually to be found in a first-class jewelery store.

GRANITE AND MARBLE WORK

Of Every Description Manufactured and Set Up Complete in any Cemetery.

I aim to be at the front in point of artistic design, best material and finest workmanship.

When this fact is given consideration, my price will always be found low.

Any person desiring to purchase Monumental Work should weigh carefully three very important considerations: First:—The quality of stock and workmanship. Second:—The responsibility of the manufacturer. Third:—The price. The purchaser who places the last consideration first, often makes a serious mistake. High-class work has a valuation that varies but little, therefore if an irresponsible dealer offers work at extremely low prices, think very carefully before signing his contract.

The volume of business which I do enables me to execute each separate order at a very small per cent. of profit. I have representatives all over New York and New England and am always glad to show designs and quote prices.
